Interesting Facts for the Week

Honey has one enemy—water. Should water get into it, the honey will spoil. Nectar is mostly water, and this flowery ingredient is also the first step in the honey-making process. Remarkably, bees remove the water from nectar by fanning it dry with their rapid wing beats. After bees regurgitate nectar into honeycombs, they leave behind a stomach enzyme that breaks down the fluid. One by-product is hydrogen peroxide which, along with honey's natural acidic and waterless state, prevents organisms from surviving inside the delicious goop. Many a surprised archaeologist has stumbled upon the sweet snack and found it edible after thousands of years. This ability to smother infections was the reason why many ancient cultures used honey as a natural bandage for open and burn wounds. If honey remains sealed against water, there is no reason why it cannot last for as long as the lid holds.

I'M FREEZING! WHY DO WE KEEP THIS HOUSE SO DARN COLD?!

CRANK UP THE THERMOSTAT AND BUILD A FIRE, WILL YA?

I HAVE A BETTER IDEA. C'MERE.

OK, STEP OUTSIDE.

IN A FEW MINUTES YOU CAN COME IN, AND THEN THE HOUSE WILL SEEM NICE AND WARM.

I'M TELLING THE NEWS PAPERS ABOUT YOU DAD!

I HAVE A SUGGESTION TO MAKE...

I SUGGEST THAT THE BOARD OF EDUCATION BE TOLD TO BUY A HERD OF TWENTY-FOUR HORSES...

THEN, INSTEAD OF PLAYING A BUNCH OF STUPID GAMES DURING GYM CLASS, WE COULD ALL SADDLE UP, AND GO FOR LONG RIDES...

LOTS OF GOOD SUGGESTIONS NEVER GET OFF THE GROUND!
