Week of October 8-13, 2018

Interesting Facts for the Week

Hanging used to be a common punishment in the UK, and wasn't abolished until 1868. Michael Barrett was the last to be executed in this manner, in Newgate prison, London, in front of a large crowd of people. Five years earlier in 1863, the first journey of the London Underground took place. With a station in operation close by the Newgate prison, it is entirely feasible that many Londoners would take the tube to go and watch somebody get hanged.

Maudie Hopkins married Civil War veteran William M. Cantrell in 1934, when she was 19 years old. She says that it was poverty that drove her to marry the former soldier of the Confederate States Army, who was 86 at the time. Hopkins passed away in 2008 in Lexa, Arkansas aged 93, which meant that a Civil War Veteran's widow was still alive when President Obama became the first African-American to serve as President.
