Interesting Facts for the Week

The Japanese military used plague-infected fleas and flies, covered in cholera, to infect the population of China. They were spread using low-flying planes and with bombs containing mixtures of insects and disease. 440,000 people died as a result. After the war, the US protected all of the Japanese germ warfare officers, including its commander, from "war crimes" prosecution, and brought them all to the US to help its own biological weapons program.

The film "The Killing Fields" cast a real life survivor of the Cambodian Genocide. Hang S. Ngor survived three terms in Cambodian Prison camp by eating insects. He went on to win an Academy Award for supporting actor. Unfortunately, he was murdered by an LA street gang in 1996.
